REVENUE INSIGHTS

Overall Revenue Overview

R698812.33

Revenue gradually increases throughout the months. Revenue remains stable throughout the first half of the year indicating consistent customer demand. The increase in revenue in the winter months may indicate a seasonal peak.

Revenue by Time of Day

Revenue by Months

Revenue gradually decreases throughout the day. Declines in the evening suggest fewer late day transactions. Consider marketing pushes around mid-day demand.

STORE INSIGHTS

Weekday sales dominate across all locations — possibly due to office crowd or weekday commuters. Weekend sales are consistent but much lower, suggesting limited weekend foot traffic. The performance pattern is consistent across all stores, meaning the drop isn't location-specific.

Store Weekday - Weekend Comparison

All three stores (Astoria, Hell's Kitchen, and Lower Manhattan) show similar product category trends, meaning customers generally prefer the same product types across locations. The tallest bars (highest revenue) indicate Coffee and Tea as the top-performing categories.

Coffee and Tea are the clear revenue leaders across all stores. Packaged Chocolate performs steadily as a secondary product. Category consistency suggests strong brand preference across neighbourhoods suggesting an advantage for marketing alignment.

Store specific opportunities:
Astoria: Emphasize afternoon promotions.
Hell's Kitchen: Optimize staffing during high-demand hours.
Lower Manhattan: Bundle bakery + coffee during morning rush.

PRODUCT CATEGORY INSIGHTS

Bright Coffee has a few top-performing products driving most of the revenue.
Many other products have significantly lower sales, which could indicate:
Niche demand or overextended product range.
Opportunities to optimize inventory by focusing on the top performers

Drinking Chocolate is the strongest category, indicating strong customer preference or higher unit pricing.

Tea and Bakery may need marketing or product refresh efforts.

Category level prioritization could improve resource allocation e.g. focus promotions on top performing categories while reviewing underperformers.

Coffee dominates weekday sales:

Suggests strong weekday consumption habits possibly office or morning-driven purchases.

Indicates weekday promotions or loyalty programs could be effective.

Packaged Chocolate performs better on weekends:

Could indicate weekend leisure purchases, gifting, or family consumption.

Weekend-focused marketing could increase sales.

TRENDS

Hourly Sales Trend

Fridays and Mondays consistently show the highest sales volumes, peaking near 25,000–30,000. Midweek (Tue–Thu) maintains moderate, steady sales. Weekends (Sat–Sun) show lower and more variable figures possibly depending on store location or traffic type. Across months January to June, there’s a gradual upward trend, showing growth and improving performance.

Monday peaks could represent strong demand from regulars returning to routine after the weekend. Friday highs may reflect customers buying extra drinks or treats before the weekend. Weaker weekends suggest Bright Coffee’s customer base may be office based or commuter-heavy, rather than leisure shoppers. The month over month growth could reflect improved brand recognition, repeat customers, or seasonal uplift.
